TEAM OBAMA

- Maya Angelou: The poet and activist sent emails on Obama's behalf.
- 2. Hank Aaron: The baseball legend who wore No. 44 appeared with Obama at a rally in Wisconsin and urged the crowd to help the 44th president "hit a grand slam."
- Mary J. Blige: The R&B star teamed up with Julianne Moore to shoot a campaign ad urging voters to protect women's health issues by re-electing Obama.
- George Clooney: The Oscar-winning actor hosted a dinner at his home where a bevy of Hollywood high rollers paid to have a meal with the president.

 Tom Hanks: The Oscarwinning actor endorsed Obama and backed it up by narrating a 17-minute Obama campaign film about the president's first term.

TEAM ROMNEY

- 6. Stacey Dash: The "Clueless" actress caught flak from some in the African-American community after her endorsement.
- Meat Loaf: The rocker, making his first presidential endorsement ever during a rally at a stadium in Defiance, Ohio, joined Romney for a duet of "America the Beautiful" under a fireworks show.

- 8. Donald Trump: His big announcement—a $5 million donation to a charity of Obama's choice if the president released his college and passport records—fell flat.
- Clint Eastwood: The Oscar-winning director and actor spurred the coining of a new term, "Eastwooding," after his Obarna-bashing "empty chair" routine at the Republican National Convention.

10. Dennis Miller: The comedian has hit the campaign trail with Romney, where he described voting for Obama as being like taking an Ambien and waking up outside naked.

Do celeb political endorsements really make a difference?

Chicago Tribune

Former Chicago Bears coach Mike Ditka endorsed Republican John McCain for president four years ago. And in 2004, Bruce Springsteen joined Democrat John Kerry on the campaign trail.

If "Iron Mike" and "The Boss" couldn't sway voters to put their respective candidate in the White House, it's hard to imagine that Meat Loaf and Honey Boo Boo would have much luck helping former Gov. Mitt Romney or President Obama pull off a victory.

Yet there's never a shortage of celebrities willing to throw their star power behind the presidential contenders. As a result, Obarna and Romney have rounded up a pretty impressive roster of celebrities to battle it out in the political arena this year.

Opinions are all over the place as to how much influence celebrities have on elections, if any.

Researchers at Northwestern University's Kellogg School of Management found that Oprah Winfrey's endorsement of Obama in the 2008 Democratic primary was worth about 1 million votes for him. But that was the so-called Oprah Effect, which some concluded is a feat only she could have pulled off.

Anthony Nownes, a political science professor at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville, found that celebrities can affect whether a party is viewed as more or less likable, depending on how voters feel about the celebrity.

"The effects were not that huge," Nownes said of his 2008 study. "But Obama isn't bringing in Springsteen to win over Republicans. They get celebrities to whip up the base. In a close election like this, it might make a difference." But Michael Cobb, associate professor of political science at North Carolina State University, said politicians are not like consumer goods. While some might rush out and buy a perfume promoted by Charlize Theron, few are eager to find out who she thinks should be president.

"People like celebrities because they're attractive, they seem cool and they may have good taste, but that does not carry over to make them credible regarding political information. So their endorsements aren't particularly persuasive," said Cobb, who has done research on celebrity endorsements mostly with college-age voters.

Buckeyes look pretty sexy now prognosticator agrees that Tuesday's presidential election will come down to who will win the 18 electoral votes from my home state of Ohio. Some rail at the silliness of this situation, but I love it. It makes an Ohioan feel like the Buckeye belle of the

This weekend, first lady Michelle Obama was in my hometown of Gambier. The week before, Republican presidential candidate Mitt Romney was in my grandparents' town of Kettering. And a few weeks before that, GOP vice presidential candidate Paul Ryan visited my roommate's hometown of New Philadelphia. These people are basically just going up to every single person in the state, saying, "Uh, hey, will you vote for me? O-H!"

Since I am either related to or friends with nearly everyone in Ohio, I can offer the candidates some unique advice on how to win over the state and take the presidency.

For instance, President Obama, I recommend you take my uncle Andy and aunt Kim out for Graeter's ice cream (and no sorbets—I'm talking Signature Chip Flavors or better!). Romney, you can shell out some of that Bain money to take my uncle Dave for some Skyline Chili. Pair it with beer and Ohio State football.

Michelle Obama, vou'll want to take my mom to Bob Evans for the biscuits and gravy, even though she'll protest at least three times before ordering and say she really shouldn't. Ann Romney, you should go see my cousins Kevin and Zach, who play baseball for Wittenberg University. I can't remember if they're still underage, but buy them a case of beer after the game anyway - they're growing

Vice President Joe Biden, you'll want to head up north to Cleveland to see my friend Allison, who's getting married next week. This may be her last chance to fool around, and she's told me (in confidence!) that she thinks you're hot. And not even "old man hot," but just normal, she'd-make-out-ina-bar-after-one-drink hot. (I know, this is a weird one, but a vote's a vote.)

Rvan, I highly recommend you go to Gahanna to debate my friend Dave about economics, religion and free will. If you win that one, you've got the election.

Now that I think about it, candidates, since this is only a fraction of my Ohio connections, maybe you just want to hire me as your all-purpose Ohio tour guide?

I could show you the drive-thru where my friend Ritesh and I used to buy Natty Light before we were 21 because he had an ID of a random Indian kid, and white people can't tell Indians apart.

Or I'll show you around Miami University, where my roommates and I devised a game called "We're Awesome" in which we drank beer and took turns throwing a cinder block over our heads. We did not measure how far the cinder block went or anything; the point was just to throw it and shout "I'm awesome"

Or, if you want, we can head out on state Route 229 to the barn where I lost my

However, if you really want the secret to winning Ohio, here it is: Stop hurling invective at each other, and start spending your super PAC money running mudslinging ads about LeBron James -- we're not even close to being over that.

Voters' turnoff: political bickering

By Leonor Vivanco

REDEYE

Although the campaigns are in the home stretch, young people have grown frustrated with politics, experts said

Abby Tyioran said she plans to sit out this election. "I'm just not particularly interested in playing into any of it," said Tyioran, 19, of Logan Square.

She said she's put off by the "sensationalism" of the election. "They're not addressing issues important to me," she said, citing education as an example.

The partisan bickering and gridlocked Congress has fueled cynicism and skepticism among young people, experts said.

"There's been a culture of stridency that has disenchanted many young people, especially when they live in a day and age where our culture is based on immediacy and our legislative process is at a stalemate," said Matthew Segal, founder of Our Time, a nonprofit representing young Americans.

Additionally, an antiquated voter registration process and restrictive voting laws in some states discourage registration and turnout, Segal said.

All this doesn't mean young adults don't care about the election, experts said.

Some don't need to be persuaded to vote. They feel compelled by their civic duty.

"You can't make a difference unless everyone participates," said Alysia Page, 19, a Harold Washington College student who lives in Bronzeville. She said she's registered and excited to be able to vote for the first time.

"You should feel a responsibility to put forth the effort to want to see things different," she said.

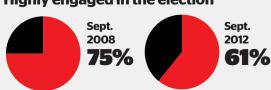

BY THE NUMBERS

With 46 million people under 30 eligible to vote this year, here's a look at what they're thinking this election compared with four years ago. L.v.

Millennials electrified the election four years ago. Now, that jolt of energy may have fizzled out.

Fewer young adults are paying attention to the election, planning to vote or even deciding to register this year than in 2008, when they were a key group in electing President Obama, according to a Pew Research Center report released in September.

This election, there's a new batch of voters—nearly 17 million who can vote for the first time—and new voting restrictions in various states.

"It's a new youth vote, and these young people did not have the opportunity to engage in the campaign early on the way their older brothers and sisters four years ago did," said Heather Smith, president of Rock the Vote.

The context of this presidential campaign is different, she said. Four years ago, the primary was an open race on both sides. The Democratic primary between a woman and black candidate itself was historic. People tuned in to the election early on, before stumping for the general election began. Campaigns—specifically Obama's—targeted young adults as voters and volunteers.

"That didn't happen this time around," Smith said. "We're starting now in a moment where we have a lot of ground to make [up] to rival 2008."

Brandon Bacerra, 19, is eligible to vote this election but isn't registered. He said he hasn't been following the election and thinks it would be unfair to vote for either candidate. "I might consider [registering and voting], but I have a lot of catching up [to do]," said Bacerra, a Columbia College student.

Although enthusiasm is down among young people, voting expert Peter Levine doesn't think it will be a catastrophic fall-off compared to the last presidential election. "'08 was a very strong year, and what it feels like to me is a return to normal," said Levine, director of the Center for Information and Research on Civic Learning and Engagement (CIRCLE) at Tufts University.

IT'S ABOUT JOBS

Millennials have pointed to jobs and the economy as the top issues for them in various polls. The unemployment rate among young people ages 18-29 is 12 percent, higher than the national jobless rate of 7.9 percent in October, according to Generation Opportunity, an organization aimed at educating Millennials on economic challenges.

Interest and voter registration tend to rise as the election gets closer, he said. Voter registration of Chicago adults ages 18-24 surged in the month leading up to the official Oct. 9 deadline, according to the Chicago Board of Election Commissioners. Preliminary data showed young adults account for 9.9 percent of 1.3 million registered voters in Chicago roughly two weeks before Election Day, which is a slight decline compared with 11.3 percent registered in 2008.

There are many questions that won't be answered until after the polls close Tuesday: What will youth turnout be? Will Obama supporters who were disappointed by the president give him another chance, stay home or vote for Romney? And in Illinois, which is not a swing state, will voters even show up if they think the state is a lock for the president?

"When you're not in a swing state, you have a feeling your vote doesn't matter as much," said Patrick Segura, 24, who lives in Lakeview. He voted in 2008 and recently relocated to Chicago from Louisiana for school. Registering to vote in Chicago isn't a priority for him.

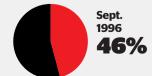

Just like other voting blocs, candidates and campaigns need to appeal to young adults, experts said.

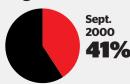

"They're not going to miraculously show up. They have to be registered, talked to and their issues have to be addressed," Smith said. "We learned that lesson in 2008 and when that happens, they respond."

United lands inaugural Dreamliner craft at O'Hare

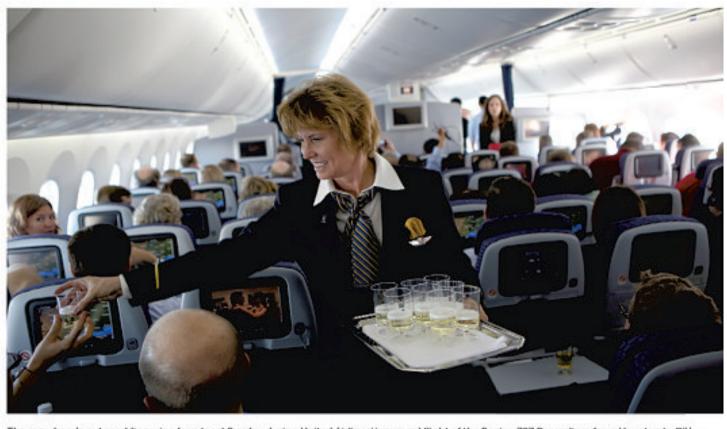

Chicago Tribune

United Airlines landed its inaugural flight of the Boeing 787 Dreamliner at O'Hare on Sunday morning to the cheers of passengers, which included many aviation enthusiasts who took the flight just to say they were there.

The twin-aisle plane, delayed more than three years by production problems at Boeing, is said to be far more fuel efficient and less costly to maintain for airlines, while offering a new level of comfort for passengers. Half of the plane, including the fuselage and wings, is made of strong and light composite materials instead of metal.

"If you want to be the world's leading airline, you need the world's leading airplane, and this is it," said CEO Jeff Smisek. Smisek said he hadn't flown on a 787 until Sunday's flight from Houston to Chicago, "It's been a long haul to get here," he said. United is the first North American airline to receive a 787, and Sunday marked its first commercial flight of the craft.

Sunday's flight also marked a big moment for the two companies, United and Boeing, whose headquarters are a few blocks apart in downtown Chicago and who once were part of the same company

The crew hands out sparkling wine for a toast Sunday during United Airlines' inaugural flight of the Boeing 787 Dreamliner from Houston to O'Hare. "It's been a long haul to get here," United CEO Jeff Smisek said. MICHAEL TERCHATTRIBUNE

The flight was important for United, which has had a rough year, with widespread delays and cancellations after a reservations system switchover in March and intermittent strife with its unions, especially pilots-although both of those problems have abated in recent weeks. The airline is still working through merger hassles, some two years after United and Continental combined.

Some observers say the halo effect of being the first North American carrier to fly the Dreamliner is a much-needed boost to the reputation of the world's largest airline. More tangibly, the plane is far more fuel efficient than planes it will replace-Boeing claims it's 20 percent more efficient than some planes it replaces. Fuel is a huge cost for airlines, so that's savings that can fall to the bottom line for United.

For Boeing, Sunday's flight represents another step toward repairing its reputation surrounding the 787, which started deliveries more than three years late due to design and production problems.

The near-constant delays were so rampant the plane earned the snarky nickname, 7-late-7.

However, Boeing may have the last laugh. Dreamliners have sold like hotcakes and early reviews are glowing from customers who have flown the plane on foreign airlines over the past year and from those who flew from Houston to Chicago on Sunday.

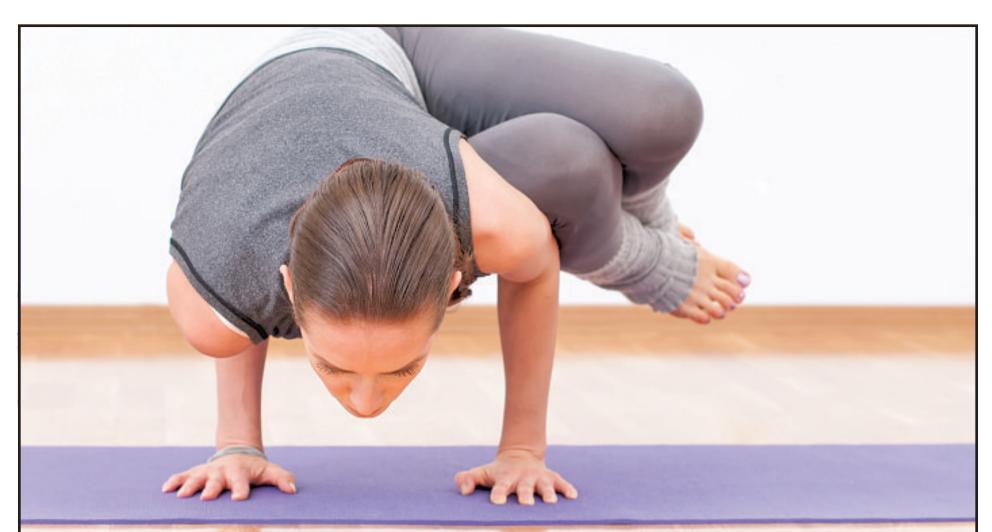

He was always a hero to us, now he's a hero for our city."

Latest Sandy nightmare: Cold-weather housing

NEW YORK A housing crisis loomed in New York City as victims of superstorm Sandy struggled Sunday without heat in near-freezing temperatures, and officials fretted displaced residents would not be able to vote in Tuesday's presidential election.

Fuel shortages and power outages lingered nearly a week after one of the worst storms in U.S. history flooded homes in coastal neighborhoods, leaving many without heat and in need of shelter. Mayor Michael Bloomberg said 30,000 to 40,000 people in New York City alone would need housing.

Overnight, at least two more bodies were found in New Jersey-one dead of hypothermia—as the overall North American death toll from Sandy climbed to at least 111.

"People are in homes that are uninhabitable," New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said alongside Bloomberg at a news conference. "People don't like to leave their home, but the reality is going to be in the temperature."

Officials were figuring out how to provide short- and long-term housing for tens of thousands of people, Cuomo said.

Immediate plans call for keeping those who have been displaced as near as possible to their homes, but Cuomo and other officials gave few details about where they would be housed.

Temperatures dipped to 39 degrees early Sunday morning in New York City, the lowest in days, with freezing temperatures expected overnight. An early-season "nor'easter" storm was expected to hit the battered New England coast this week with strong winds and heavy rain.

Bears' next opponent—which gave fans time to ponder how this team can get better. Yes, even at 7-1, the Bears have work to do if they're going to make a serious run at the Super Bowl.

Seeing as politicians always promise to improve things, why can't NFL teams do the same? The Bears can start with this to-do list. They should promise to ...

True, not all the hits Cutler takes are the O-line's fault. He needs to throw the ball away when running toward the sideline instead of sticking his neck out, for example. However, he seems to take more than his share of blindside shots, fumbling often. Set up a force field, maybe? REUTERSPHOTO

Send the Dolphins a gift basket

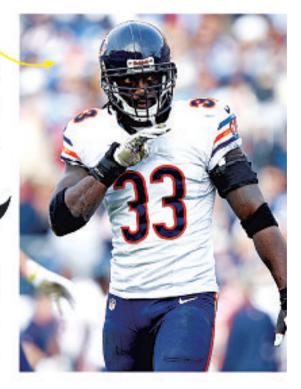

Except for the game against Green Bay-the Bears' only loss thus far-Brandon Marshall has looked brilliant. He caught nine passes for 122 yards and three scores Sunday and has seven TDs this season. Could be the best deal in Chicago. BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE PHOTO

Have Charles Tillman teach a seminar

He's forced 36 fumbles in his career, including four Sunday. The guy's a magician, though sharing his secrets with teammates shouldn't be out of line, especially with Andre Johnson, Calvin Johnson, Larry Fitzgerald and the Packers receivers still ahead. In fact, give Tillman a raise, José M. OSORIO/TRIBUNE PHOTO

Several Bears are taking part in the Movember campaign to raise money for cancer awareness. No matter how the team plays from here on out, their mustaches will be entertaining. Just don't mention how they remind us of playoff beards in hockey. D'oh! Our bad.

Extend Lovie Smith's contract On second thought, let's wait to see how the Bears weather their next eight games, especially against

Houston (7-1), San Francisco (6-2) and, of course, Green

Bay (6-3). Super Bowl or bust? us presswire prioro

Haven't seen these Bears since ... ever

Midway through the first quarter, back when the Bears had only seven points, our friend Lauren told us she was watching her first NFL game ever. This seemed impossible. After all, she spent her childhood in Minnesota and now resides in Chicago. But she's built up a lot of credibility in the few years I've known her, so I will assume she is telling the truth.

If that is the case, however, she may not have fully appreciated what she witnessed.

This wasn't just a win. It was a work of art. It was a game that rewrites the "The last time ..." section in the Bears record book. It wasn't just one or two brilliant occurrences surrounded by steady play; it was a stupefying combination of outrageous achievement.

This game featured a blocked punt returned for a touchdown PLUS a franchise-best 28 first-quarter points PLUS the team's first 50-point game since 1980 PLUS the team's first 50-point game since 1980 PLUS the team's first 50-point road game since 1963 PLUS Brian Urlacher's first pick-six since 2007 PLUS Charles Tillman forcing as many fumbles in one game (four) as he previously had in a season PLUS Tillman tying and then passing Richard Dent for the Bears' career lead with forced fumbles PLUS Brandon Marshall becoming the first Bears wide receiver in 11 years to catch three TDs in a game.

The Bears scored in every quarter.
They won the first quarter 28-2 and won the rest of the game 23-18. They turned a road game into a home game; in the fourth quarter, chants of "Let's go Bears!"
were loud enough to be heard on TV.

The Bears are 7-1, finished the season's second quarter 4-0, posted the team's third 40-point game and achieved a near perfection over the season's first half.

Come to think of it, I'm right there with you, Lauren: I've never seen anything like this either.

Really? We're talking about the Cubs here. We're rebuilding. We're on Year 104, be patient.

Because Marmol blows everything. He's the new Lisa Ann.

Athletes? He's all over them

Former Bulls ball boy scores in fashion world

By Scott Bolohan | FOR REDEYE

As a ball boy for the Bulls from 1994-97, Jason Franklin has stories. Not everyone can claim Scottie Pippen drove him in his Ferrari to a first date.

After Franklin, who grew up in Deerfield but now lives in L.A., had that introduction to the sports world, it's no surprise he never wanted to move far from it. Once he realized he would never play for the Bulls, he merged his love of sports and design. In 2006, Franklin started clothing line Sportiqe and soon found his fashions in every NBA arena.

Franklin, 34, talked to RedEye about sports fashion, the best-dressed Chicago athlete and the clothes Jordan wears.

How did Sportige get started?

When I was 11, my doctor ruined my dreams that I was going to be the starting point guard for the Chicago Bulls. So if I wanted to be involved with sports, I had to find something else. ... I loved to design hats with sports logos on them. At the age of 12 I got the chance to design baseball hats for a company out of Chicago, and I worked with them for 13 years. I realized if I wanted to reach my entrepreneurial goals, I had to start my own business. Being a ball boy for the Bulls in high school and going to pretty much every home game from 1986 on, I thought it would be cool to do more fashionable apparel, to make a more fashionable brand for the fan. We made a deal with the NBA, and one of my friends is the violinist for Dave Matthews Band, and we started designing for them too.

What is the worst fashion mistake a sports fan can make?

I see some fashion that I might not agree with, but I think it's a unique way to celebrate the team. Maybe when they don't have a shirt on and their body is painted.

How did you end up as the Bulls' ball boy during the dynasty?

My dad had season tickets for the Bulls. At the age of 14 I went over to the Berto Center and knocked on their door and asked if I could be their ball boy. I was too young and they told me to come back next year. The only other way to explain it would be to be the bat boy for the Yankees when Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig were there. I would have dinner with some of the guys after the game, some would come over to my house for dinner. ... Being around the Bulls at that time has helped me with the relationships I have now with athletes and rock stars.

Who is the most fashionable Chicago ath-

Jay Cutler looks pretty sharp on game day. He's pretty put together. I would say he's the most fashionable Chicago athlete right

Michael Jordan. What is going on with his

When he was playing he was a fashion icon. Everyone is unique and people have their own unique style. Just because what Michael is wearing might be a baggier jean or is ripped, whatever you are wearing, you have to be comfortable in it. That's what fashion is. THE 2012-13 VIRTUAL BLACKHAWKS Since there's no real hockey being played, we're simulating the Hawks' 2012-13 season on "NHL 13." For a gallery featuring all the games, visit redevechicago.com. – RYAN SMITH FOR REDEVE

Nov. 3: Toronto 3, Blackhawks 1

It had to happen sometime. The Blackhawks' first loss of the season was handed to them by a hot Toronto team that won despite being outshot 31-26. Nikolai Kulemin scored the go-ahead goal for the Maple Leafs in the first period and tacked on another goal in the second. Marian Hossa scored with four minutes left in the game to end Toronto's shutout bid.

RECORD: 7-1-1

Nov. 5: Pittsburgh 3, Blackhawks 1

Pittsburgh fans might be excited to see the return of oft-injured superstar Sidney Crosby, but the Blackhawks? Not so much. Crosby notched two goals and an assist in helping the Penguins hand the Hawks their second straight loss. In doing so, Pittsburgh matches Chicago for the best record in the league. A potential concern for the Hawks-only two goals in their last seven periods. RECORD: 7-2-1

ABC takes a 'dive' In 2013, ABC will debut a reality diving competition called "Celebrity Splash," and four-time Olympic gold medalist Greg Louganis has signed on as a judge. According to a network announcement, "Celebrity Splash" broke ratings records in the Netherlands. It's only a matter of time until "Celebrity Judo" debuts.

GAMING MOVIE MAGIC

'Wreck-It Ralph' mixes classic games with fictional pixel lands

By Ryan Smith

FOR REDEY

"Wreck-It Ralph," Disney's arcade-centric animated movie that earned $49.1 million over the weekend, wins a lot of laughs with countless jokes referencing classic video games. Some of the characters and titles that make cameos in "Ralph" are real quarter-munchers from the past, while others are fictional nods to existing games. "Mario" and "Sonic" are gimmes, so here's a short guide to some of the other games that appear in "Wreck-It Ralph."

REAL GAMES 'Street Fighter II' 1991

Some of the film's best lines come from the hilarious appearance of brawlers from Capcom's buttonmashing fighting game.

'Q*bert' 1982

The, um, Q rating of the once popular Q*Bert character has sharply declined over the years, leading to the odd, long-nosed creature's sad state in "Wreck-It Ralph."

'Contra' 1986

'Root Beer Tapper' 1983

Originally an arcade game called "Tapper" sponsored by Budweiser, this kid-friendly, non-alcoholic version lets gamers play as a root-beer bartender filling mugs and sliding them down countertops to thirsty patrons. The Tapper bar is the virtual Cheers of "Wreck-It Ralph."

'Pac-Man' 1980

Gaming's first huge crossover star appears as a partygoer at Fix-It Felix's anniversary shindig, but it's ghostly bad guy Clyde who steals the show as the leader of a support group for video game villains convincing them to accept their evil lot in life.

'Fix-It Felix Jr.'

The 30-year-old arcade game that earns top billing in the movie features a carpenter who uses a magic hammer to repair the damage of oafish villain Ralph. It's a fictional game that appears based on two classic games: "Donkey Kong" and the monster-mashing game "Rampage."

'Hero's Duty'

Jane Lynch's tough-talking supersoldier comes from a first-person shooter called "Hero's Duty," which evokes both the military shoot-'em-up "Call of Duty" and Xbox's "Gears of War" series.

'Turbo Time'

The pixelated denizens of the arcade in "Wreck-It Ralph" tell legends of the character from a classic-looking racer who tries to invade other games to stay relevant. "Turbo Time" looks a bit like Atari's 1982 arcade driving game "Pole Position."

'Sugar Rush'

The obvious inspiration for this candycoated kart-racing game that plays a big role in the movie is

"Super Mario Kart," but the "Candy Land"-style aesthetic evokes a Katy Perry video gone wild.

Finally, Playboy and fantasy gaming mix

By Ryan Smith

FOR REDEYE

In a gaming world where "Call of Duty" and "World of Warcraft" seem to get the most attention, it might be a surprise that neither is the world's most played video game.

"League of Legends," the most popular of the relatively new MOBA (multiplayer online battle arena) genre of games, has surpassed its competitors with an average of 12 million players logging on to play every day, according to Riot Games. That's an enormous player base, especially considering that the massively multiplayer "World of Warcraft" has 10 million subscribers and "Farmville 2" on Facebook claims 8.5 million daily users, according to The Associated Press.

"League of Legends" got a boost from an unlikely spokesperson in Pamela Horton, Playboy Magazine's reigning Miss October, who said she's hoping to eventually join Riot Games as an artist. RedEye caught up with the hardcore-gamer-turned-Playmate to talk about why everyone should jump on the "League of Legends" bandwagon.

How did you get started playing "League of Legends?"

I had a friend send me a message on Face-book who suggested it. He thought it'd be a game I'd be passionate about. But here's a thing about me: When I commit to a game, I really commit. At the time I was playing "World of Warcraft," so at first I didn't want to cheat on "WoW." But we went to a group hangout and I played as Janna and Morgana from "LoL" and I loved it.

How do you explain a MOBA to a newbie?

It's kind of like a castle-defense game except without a castle. You have an army and these super-powered generals. Then it's basically a 5-on-5 game where you work with your teammates to take down the other side's nexus and defend yours. It's all about teamwork.

How do you explain that it's now the No. 1 online game?

It's not that big of a time commitment. Some matches can last an hour, but most are 20 to 30 minutes. Also, because there are so many characters (more than 100), it's never the same game twice. Plus you have the pleasure of meeting new friends. It's so refreshing.

Do you disguise who you are when you play?

Nope, I have an account MissOctober2012 to play with my fans. I have a main account that doesn't have the most girly name like Purple-Rainbow or anything, but I don't hide who I am. It seems like when I play first-person shooters, that's when I get the most crap. In "League of Legends," the community is more accepting.

Is there anyone playing "League of Legends" at the Playboy mansion?

They have some gaming consoles hooked up in the living room, but it's a big huge mansion and I'm one of the few girls who play video games. I usually play "World of Warcraft" and "League of Legends" on my laptop in my bedroom.

Will 'Flight' director nail Cubs prediction?

By Matt Pais

"Flight" director Robert Zemeckis hasn't achieved much as a filmmaker. Oh, wait, the 60-year-old, who was raised in the South Side neighborhood of Roseland, made classic films such as "Back to the Future," "Who Framed Roger Rabbit?" and "Forrest Gump," for which he won the best director Oscar. At the Park Hyatt, Zemeckis, who's based in L.A. but still has a place on Lake Shore Drive, talked about the predictions made in "Back to the Future II."

On predictions from "Back to the Future II": "We're batting 50/50."

Something he predicted in "Back to the Future II" he's proud came true:

"Flat-panel TV screens, junk faxes. The list is actually pretty good. 3-D, holograms ... hoverboards. A guy invented a real hoverboard."

Will the Cubs win the World Series in 2015, as seen in the movie?

"I'm one of those people who doesn't think the Cubs can ever win the World Series. It's almost become their identity."

On his Sox/Cubs fandom:

"I'm both. Now that I live in California, I'm both. [Laughs.] ... I'd be a Sox fan if I lived on the South Side, absolutely."

On how safe the 2015 prediction seemed in

"I know, now it's creeping up. Now I guess that movie will be quaint, won't it? It will be, 'Oh, look at that, they thought the Cubs were going to win."

On the benefits if they do win in 2015:

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21 Neptune is making you delusional. You're convinced that stranger vou see every day on the subway is your true love, even though vou've never talked to him.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21 Bouncy Mars is increasing your sexual stamina. If you have a hot date planned, expect it to sizzle. You'll want your sensual powers

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19 Jupiter is reminding you that you still have many important things to learn about healthy relationships. Maybe you're giving all the time, and you need to learn how to take. Or maybe it's the other way around. Find what needs to be changed.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18 With the moon opposite your sign, you're being too hard on yourself about past mistakes. If a romance lasted about five minutes. that's OK. Don't try to hold on to something that's outlived its usefulness.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 The sun is increasing your ambition. It's not enough for you to just have a job. You want an exciting career. It's not enough for you to just be dating someone. You want to spend time with a true soulmate. Don't give up.

Aries March 21-April 19 You're not getting enough attention and it's bumming you out. The moon is making you cranky, grumpy and most of the other Seven Dwarves of Disney fame.

Taurus April 20-May 20 A thoughtful moon has you making lists of your partner's many failures. You're picking apart your relationship bit by bit. But is this really a good idea?

Gemini May 21-June 21 You're being challenged to express different aspects of yourself and to access unused brainpower. Jupiter is helping you tap into your intelligence in a new way as you work to get to know a smart someone a little better.

Cancer June 22-July 22 An emotional sun is tempting you to let it all hang out. If you're madly in love with someone. let him or her know. If you've been holding back important information from your true love, stop being so evasive.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22 This isn't the time to keep pushing. The moon is making you extremely impatient, but being aggressive isn't going to get you anywhere. Sometimes, to get what (or who) you want, you have to keep cool.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22 You're thinking about past relationships and analyzing what went wrong. This is a good process. Mercury is helping you to pinpoint behaviors, attitudes or actions that always get you in trouble.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 This is a great week for partying, dating and socializing. Put on your best outfit and glam it up. Drop pointed comments about politics, race or religion into the conversation and display your intelligence.

CHICAGO CONNECTION

CONNECTION Kim Taylor, an ambitious 30-yearold entrepreneur originally from Chicago, signed up for Bravo's "Start-ups: Silicon Valley" in large part to show women that they too can become entrepreneurs. During filming, Taylor quit her job with a start-up to launch her own venture, which focuses on high-end fashion. In Bravo, she saw the kind of prime-time exposure that could lift that dream off the ground. "Some people say, 'This will hurt you,' or 'This will hurt your career," she said. "But I am entering an industry with a high barrier to entry that loves Bravo." L.A. TIMES

Hard-partying tech geeks get real

New reality show cast has Silicon Valley insiders cringing

Los Angeles Times

SAN FRANCISCO It was only a matter of time before reality show producers trained their cameras on Silicon Valley. High-tech's promised land has money, power and more ambition per square foot than just about anywhere on the planet.

"Start-ups: Silicon Valley," which debuts at 9 p.m. Monday on Bravo, chronicles the lives of six young entrepreneurs. But tech insiders are fuming that the reality show is more silicone than silicon.

Unlike New Jersey, which has embraced the tequila-chugging, spray-tan zeitgeist of the "Jersey Shore" gang, or Southern California, where every waiter is a reality-show wannabe, Silicon Valley takes itself seriously. Previews that show the telegenic "Start-ups" cast cavorting in nightclubs and at toga parties have some people cringing.

"Here Comes Silicon Valley Boo Boo," snarked TechCrunch co-editor Alexa Tsotsis.

"It is quite literally making us look like 'The Jersey Shore,' only without the tans," raged Silicon Valley blogger Sarah Lacy after watching a preview for the show.

What made Lacy even madder: This wasn't just entertainment-industry types, looking to make a quick buck, but also a connected Silicon Valley insider.

Randi Zuckerberg, Mark Zuckerberg's sister and an early Facebook employee, signed on to the show as an executive producer. Now she's taking heat for selling out Silicon Valley to Hollywood.

Zuckerberg says she's not surprised at the prickly reaction. "This is the first show that has flung open the doors of this community that tends to be very insular," she said.

Her message to critics: Lighten up already. It's cable TV, not a PBS documentary, Zuckerberg said. Viewers expect over-the-top drama; otherwise, they wouldn't tune in. But that doesn't mean the show can't inform and inspire, she said.

She promises a mix of the high-tech drama that comes from the tough business of building a start-up from scratch and the claw-youreyes-out drama that has made rich housewives and master chefs so popular in prime time.

"At the end of the day, we want to make great TV," Zuckerberg said.

The reality-show formula calls for beauty, style and colorful personalities—and "Start-ups" has all three in spades.

Cast member David Murray is a former Google employee who, at the ripe old age of 29, has had multiple plastic surgeries, including a hair transplant and a nose job. He moonlights as an opera singer.

Sarah Austin, a 26-year-old blogger, provides much of the show's tension by having a romantic dalliance with one cast member and a falling-out with the rest. Her diva cred is established in the first episode, when she's shown staying at the Four Seasons hotel in East Palo Alto and ordering a room-service hamburger for her Maltese dog, named Juniper.

Entrepreneur Ben Way, 32, is a British transplant who rents a $17,000-a-month villa with his 27-year-old sister Hermione, also a cast member, and four roommates in the hills above San Francisco's Castro District. The 1930s Spanish-style home features dark woods and white marble, a heated pool, a theater room, decks on three levels with city views, even its own Twitter feed. (The rest of the cast lives on their own in more modest abodes in Silicon Valley and San Francisco, resisting an initial push from producers that they all move in together.)

Still, the "Start-ups" members insist that they are no different from others who have come to the Bay Area to pursue the Silicon Valley dream—just luckier. More than 7,000 people tried out for the show.

"Probably half of those who auditioned are the ones who are making negative comments about us now," Way said.

He and his blogger sister give mainstream America a road map to becoming successful entrepreneurs, he said. The pair raised $500,000 in funding to build a fitness gadget and app during filming.

"That's how we are different from 'Jersey Shore.' We're doers," Way said. "We don't just drink and party all the time."
